SYMPOSIUM

Sustainability and Humanities: linking social values, theology and spirituality towards sustainability

Canterbury Christ Church University
Wednesday, 8th November 2017

/// BACKGROUND

There are strong links between sustainability and the humanities, which go well beyond the mere inclusion of the social sciences. Yet, the debate on the contribution of the humanities to a better understanding of sustainable development is not as intensive as it should be. There is also a paucity of events which have specifically focused on exploring the links between sustainability and humanities. As a result, interesting opportunities are being missed, and a holistic discussion on the intellectual and moral aspects of sustainable development is not fully taking place.

It is against this background that the Symposium “Sustainability and Humanities: linking social values, theology and spirituality towards sustainability” is being organised by the Inter-University Sustainable Development Research Programme, the World Sustainable Development Research and Training Centre and Canterbury Christ Church University in Canterbury, England. The Symposium It will involve researchers in the field of humanities and sustainable development in the widest sense.

The Symposium will provide a forum for the humanities to share ongoing practices as part of the overall debate on sustainable development in both teaching and research programmes. By doing so it will contribute to the further development of this central topic.

/// AIMS

The aims of the “Sustainability and Humanities: linking social values, theology and spirituality towards sustainability” are as follows:

- i. to provide teaching staff at universities active and/or interested on humanities and sustainable development with an opportunity to display and present their works (i.e. curriculum innovation, empirical work, activities, case studies practical projects);
- ii. to foster the exchange of information, ideas and experiences acquired in the execution of teaching and research, especially successful initiatives and good practice;
- iii. to discuss methodological approaches and projects which aim to offer a better understanding of how the humanities may contribute towards the debate on sustainable development;
- iv. to network the participants and provide a platform so they can explore possibilities for further cooperation.

Last but not least, a further aim of the event will be to document and disseminate the wealth of experiences on the humanities and sustainable development teaching available today. To this purpose, the peer-reviewed book titled “Sustainability and Humanities: linking social values, theology and spirituality towards sustainability” will be published, with all accepted papers. This will be part of the award-winning “World Sustainability Series”, published by Springer, one of the world’s top five scientific publishers.

/// PROFILE OF PARTICIPANTS

Delegates attending the Symposium will come from a cross-sectoral range of areas. These are:

- i. research and teaching staff
- ii. student groups;
- iii. members of university administrations;
- iv. project officers and consultants;
- v. other people interested in the field.

It is believed that this wide range of participants will help to outline the need for integrated approaches towards integrating the humanities in sustainable development (and vice-versa) and, hence contribute towards advancing this field of work even further.

/// STRUCTURE OF THE EVENT

The Symposium will be organised around two main strands:

Strand 1: the posters

Participating universities will be able to put-up displays describing their works, research and teaching projects, and to distribute the relevant information to the participants.

Strand 2: the presentations

A set of presentations, divided into two main sections will be organised, dealing with issues of strategic value in outlining the contribution of the Humanities to sustainable development. These are:

Session 1: Sustainability and Humanities in research

Session 2: Sustainability and Humanities in formal and non-formal teaching programmes

Abstract

The implementation of sustainable development in higher education is a global trend. Yet, the intensity and the depth with which higher education institutions are taking on the challenge of sustainability, significantly differs.

This paper presents a global analysis about how higher education institutions are including sustainability issues in the different areas (e.g. teaching, research, outreach and institutional management) and describes the progress made in this field during the last 10 years. A special emphasis is given to the problems and barriers which prevent developments in respect of the integration of sustainability issues in higher education. Finally, some concrete steps which may be undertaken in order to allow universities to integrate sustainable development in their activities but also in regional development, are outlined. This paper will be useful to anyone interested in the different levels of emphasis given to sustainable development at higher education institutions across the world.
